

DISCOVER the WCC Library

“I lay down into the driving as if into a hot bath, paying very little attention to anything except the road in front and in my mirror, and pleurably holding the car, along these first sixty miles of narrow and twisted concrete, up against the thin margin of danger.”

*--James Agee,
Let Us Now Praise
Famous Men*

A photograph of a man with glasses and a blue button-down shirt looking down at a smartphone. The image is overlaid with a semi-transparent graphic of a road with yellow dashed lines, suggesting a connection between the man's activity and the text about driving.

Greg Marshall